Ambulance service accused of retaliatory firing

Former EMT alleges she was dismissed after reporting sexual harassment

By Jeremy D. Wells
Carter County Times

A former employee of Carter County Emergency Ambulance Service is alleging that she was dismissed from part time duty with the service because of complaints she made about sexual harassment from a co-worker. Kim Knipp is an EMT with more than 20 years of experience. She alleges that after she reported the harassment – which included unwanted touching as well as suggestive comments – and didn't see any action taken, she approached her supervisor about putting in her two weeks notice because she didn't feel safe.

Instead, she worked out an agreement to work part time hours, so she wouldn't have to be in the firehouse at the same time as the person she said was harassing her. But, she says, after working just a couple of those part time shifts she received a letter in the mail telling her she was no longer employed with the service.

Knipp, who would have been with Carter County for four years in June, said the saga began after she reported the harassment.

"I think it all started when I turned (someone) in for sexual harassment," Knipp said. "Then, I didn't feel like they were doing

Utilities commission discusses upgrades near KCU

By Charles Romans
Carter County Times

The Grayson Utilities Commission wrestled with supply issues while doing repairs last week that affected Kentucky Christian University. Utilities Commission Director Gerald Haney said there were three non-functioning water valves involved, and that one of the challenges with the repair concerned securing the proper couplings to join the new pipe to existing pipe.

This issue occurs when working with water systems that have been installed, in some cases, decades prior because the sizing of newer pipe might have changed in the intervening years. There is even the possibility of shrinkage occurring in older pipes. In most cases this shrinkage only involves a fraction of a decimal point, but that is still a major concern on a line that must carry and hold pressure. Haney said that fortunately they were able to find the correct couplings from a West Virginia company before they cut the lines to change the

Toward a Credo

George Eklund discusses his latest book of poetry

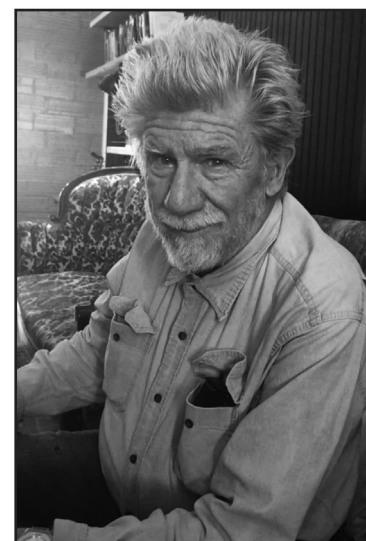

By Jeremy D. Wells
Carter County Times

I hadn't yet read any of the poems in George Eklund's new book, Toward a Credo, when we sat down to chat. If I had, I might have asked different questions. I might have asked about the re-occurring mentions of Portugal. Or about the reflections on aging and experience we see in the titular poem; where the speaker begins by telling us, "I watch the gray waves of my face, And imagine the letters, I will never write."

Instead, chatting over a cup of coffee at the Olive Hill Dairy Queen, we discussed his thoughts on the new book, his past work, the impact of large language models and generative AI on the future of literature and artistic expression, the inherent poetry of daily life in Appalachia, and the discipline of writing in general.

Toward a Credo is Eklund's third full length book of poetry, though he's published several shorter chapbooks and other smaller publications, and I asked him about the relevance of the title.

"Credo is an old word," he said. "Latin. Creed and credo are related." While those two words are used as nouns -- a credo or creed being a vow or statement of beliefs -- the original Latin was a verb, he noted, meaning "I believe."

"So, the whole idea of a credo," Eklund said, "I'm very process oriented in the way I do art, and the way I think and write, and the whole idea of writing as a way to bring oneself closer to a system of belief, whether it be aesthetic or spiritual or political... I like that whole idea of writing as a way to take us toward a discovery, or call it a creed, a belief, the truth, the breakthrough of the system, whatever. So, I think that maybe that's an aesthetic kind of statement about how I feel about writing, and maybe art in general."

He said that this is a theme that he feels is reflected throughout the poems in the book.

"I think so," he said, "because I think each poem, really, is a part of that process. It's a search. The whole idea of a poem as a process of searching."

He explained that the idea of the essay was another theme that repeated itself throughout the book.

"Some of my poems are called essays. Essay on a River, or Essay on a Child in Bed, or whatever. And the whole idea of the poem as essay appeals to me because the essay in its essence is a piece of writing which is an experiment. A search. Essais, in French, means to search. To go on a search to find out what's going to happen."

He explained that the individual who invented the essay as a literary form, Michel de Montaigne, did just that.

"That's what he did. He was the rich guy, who sat by a window, had a big library around him, and said, 'I think I want to essay. See where my brilliant mind goes.' So, that's a kind of return. I like to return back to the whole idea of the poem as a journey, as a search, as an experiment. In Spanish it's ensayo, means a rehearsal. Each poem is a kind of rehearsal or a practice or an experiment or an etude (a study), or a part of the process, the practice and process to find the creed. The discovery. The answer."

This idea of writing as a form of discovery and reflection inevitably led to discussion of generative AI and the impact that is having, and will continue to have, on writing -- particularly for educators.

"I've had these thoughts in my head every day, especially with the rise of AI to me it is, well, it's going to be great and it's going to be terrifying. It'll save us and kill us all at once. It's the paradox. But I've already had some weird experiences with AI"

While Eklund, who is a retired educator, no longer has to worry about students turning in AI generated content, the same can't be said for his wife, who is still teaching.

"Laura can't stand it," he said. "She has to go through, and she uses special apparatuses to look for plagiarized work every time she has a writing assignment."

He said he's been amazed by how well the algorithm can generate content -- even matching his own style -- when the proper prompts were utilized by his friends who shared the content with him. And while there are legitimate concerns about its impacts, especially on work in the arts and entertainment fields, there is one thing that AI can never replace, and that's the use of writing as a tool for self-reflection and growth.

"I believe in such notions as the soul," Eklund said. "And I don't think AI can replicate the soul. The whole idea of language connects us to the soul in a way, it connects us to ourselves, in ways that other things can't."

It's part of that lifelong journey of finding meaning in our lives; of making sense of it all as we move toward our eventual end. Or, as the final stanza of Toward a Credo's title poem reads, "Gather some paper and mark it, And pass it around, And pass away."

Simple strategies to control mosquitoes

Mosquitos can ruin outdoor activities in the warmer months. It may seem like a never-ending battle when you're fighting to control the pesky insects. With mosquito-borne diseases becoming more prevalent, it's even more important to know how to take control of these pests around your home. Learning to do a few simple things could help protect you from more than the itchiness of a mosquito bite.

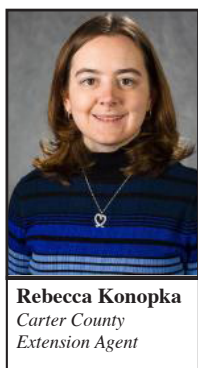

All mosquitos need standing water to develop through their larval stages, and that doesn't necessarily mean a lake or pond. It also includes bird baths, kiddie pools and even discarded soda pop cans. The key to controlling them around your home is to stop them from breeding in the first place.

Some things you can do include:

- Drain and remove trash, bottles and any debris that holds water.
- Recycle any unused containers that could collect water, especially old tires.
- Change water weekly in bird baths, wading pools, watering troughs and animal bowls.
- Fill in holes, depressions and puddles in your yard.
- Make sure your culverts and ditches are draining properly.
- Check and clean out clogged gutters to ensure drainage.
- Keep ornamental ponds stocked with fish.
- Fix leaky hoses and faucets.
- Drain water from flowerpots and garden containers.
- Turn over wheelbarrows, buckets and other items that collect water.

- Adjust tarps covering woodpiles, boats and grills to remove standing water.
- Encourage natural enemies of mosquitoes, such as warblers, swallows, martins and other insect-feeding birds.

It's a good idea to start these practices early in the season and to continue them throughout the summer. EMS from A-1 anything about it. And I'm not ever really sure if they did. I know he isn't there any longer, but I'm not sure if he stepped down or they've let him go."

Backing up, however, she said that after making the report, and not seeing any action, on April 28 she approached her supervisor to put in her two weeks notice.

"I told them I didn't want to stay somewhere where I'd be a victim, and not have anyone believe me," she said.

After talking, she said, they agreed on May 12 as her last day as a full time employee, with the transition to part-time to help the ambulance service fill their needs while maintaining Knipp's safety and giving her a partial income stream.

"Then I worked one part time shift, which was on the 19th," she said. "And I worked a 24 hour shift. And then on June 9, I got a letter in the mail saying I was terminated because they were restructuring."

Knipp said she never had any negative comments or reports, and that there were others working part-time shifts, because the help was needed, so she doesn't understand why she was let go. She said she can only assume it was in retaliation for making the report. This makes Knipp at least the second individual to allege retaliatory firings from the ambulance service in recent months, including an anonymous individual who says they were targeted because of a belief they sent letters to the judge executive, each of the county magistrates, the mayors of Grayson and Olive Hill, and local media.

Knipp said she isn't sure who's responsible for the firing, though she said she never had any problems with any supervisors or co-workers other than the one she reported for harassment.

When she reported the harassment, she said, she met in director Tim Wood's office with ambulance board president Kara Johnson and the board's attorney, Jason Greer. She said she asked to have Lisa Hensley in the room with her, because she was the compliance officer at the time, but the request was denied.

After making the report, she said, she didn't speak to director Tim Woods for nearly two weeks. When she did speak to him, she claims he told her, "I'm going to do it right this time, and not do what I did last time."

She said she believes that was in reference to complaints about the same individual from other female co-workers, though she isn't sure if anyone was explicitly named in those other reports.

"He (Tim) was made aware from another co-worker that (this individual) was doing something, but no names were mentioned," Knipp said.

Ambulance board president Kara Johnson directed all questions related to Knipp's allegations to their attorney, Jason Greer. Greer said he was unable to comment on most aspects of the accusations, or the recent firings, as they included both protected employee information and were part of an ongoing investigation. While Greer was able to confirm that the individual accused of the harassment was no longer an employee of the ambulance service, he could not say whether he stepped down voluntarily or was dismissed.

He also could not confirm if recent moves by the board to approve the installation of new security cameras, or to provide sleeping quarters with locks, were related to the harassment allegations.

"I will say this, as counsel for EMS, we are committed to a zero tolerance policy for any sort of sexual harassment, any form of misconduct, and any form of retaliation against any sort of protected activity," Greer said.

For her part Knipp says she has no hard feelings towards anyone at the service other than the individual she reported. She also said she would like to have her job back. But, she said, "I don't want to stay somewhere where my word can't be trusted."

"I've been a good employee," Knipp said. "I've done what I've been told. And, like I said, I just don't understand why I was terminated for standing up for what was the truth."

She said that dedication to the truth is also why she reported her harasser in the first place, and why she was speaking out under her own name, instead of anonymously.

"I just do whatever I can to help someone else," she said, "and that's why I stood up."

valves. The goal, according to Haney, was to complete the repairs before KCU students returned to campus, and the utilities commission was able to meet that goal.

"We had three valves that were no longer operational on College Street," Haney explained of the project. "And we had to turn off a big area all the way down Hord Street, which also affected the Justice Center. The valves had stopped working a long time ago and needed to be changed. And thankfully we were able to accomplish that without major disruption."

The valves in question were 10-inch gate valves, Haney said, and when working allow segments of the water system to be opened up or shut off. The water line that runs down Hord Street runs all the way to College Street, he explained, and 't's' into the line with valves at each part of the 't.' By operating the valves, it allows workers to repair one section of line without affecting the others. Ideally, with operational valves, only customers on the affected line would experience an outage.

Haney said the replacement of the valves will be of huge benefit to the city. For example, if there is ever a leak on Hord Street, College Street is less likely to be affected because of the valves installed on the line. The valves, Haney said, allow for more effective use of the grid system in the city. When functioning properly, he explained, outages can be localized, and the city can often avoid the shutdown of multiple city blocks.

The grid is definitely beneficial, Haney said, but can also come with its own challenges, especially when it comes to determining the exact location of leaks. And in the case of a grid where multiple lines of different types are present, other difficulties can present themselves. For instance, sewage lines, Haney said, are installed over gravel. If there is a leak in a nearby water line that gravel functions as a sort of French drain, to leach away the excess water. When this happens, it can be difficult to determine the leak location because the excess water does not rise to the surface and can't be spotted by visual examination.

Fortunately, the city is in the process of replacing many of the 250 miles of water line with new pipes (and gate valves) that are designed to better monitor flow. Technicians can monitor the lines and if there is an excessive flow through a certain area they can respond accordingly.

"We could have had a leak that followed the sewer lines or went into the storm drains, and people might have lost pressure," Haney said. "But we were still losing water between the main and the meter."

The new monitoring system will help prevent that by narrowing the search window for any leaks causing that sort of loss. Haney said that while it would be nice to never have to fix leaks, and for customers to never have to deal with water outages, that just isn't a practical expectation. But with the improvements Grayson Utilities is doing to the city water system it will be easier to eliminate many future issues and respond more quickly to those issues that do occur.

Tips to consider to help you stay healthy during summer travel

By Dr. Amit Arwindekar, Medical Director at UnitedHealthcare Global

With summer in full swing, many Kentuckians may be planning a vacation. While some prefer a staycation, 86% of Americans plan to travel out of state and 50% plan to travel internationally.

Everyone hopes their trip will go smoothly, but more than 1 in 4 Americans report getting sick or hurt on a vacation and 56% needed medical treatment as a result. To help you prioritize a healthy and safe trip, consider these tips:

Check-in with your primary care doctor before traveling. Schedule an appointment with your doctor prior to your vacation. During your visit, inform your doctor of your travel plans to see how best to support your health while traveling, including getting any recommended or required vaccinations. Before leaving, refill any prescriptions you might need while away and pack enough to last your entire trip. Check travel health information and recent travel notices for destinations abroad so you know what to expect when you arrive.

If you haven't had an annual wellness exam and preventive screenings recently, this may be a good time to make sure you are on top of any health concerns. Health plans usually cover preventive care, which means you may pay $0 out of pocket for certain covered preventive services if you go to a network provider.

You may also consider options like virtual visits for non-emergency care. Virtual visits may be both cost-effective and more convenient. Talk to your health plan and doctor about virtual care options that might be available to you while traveling. Virtual care may help you quickly and affordably access needed care with a network provider while on the road.

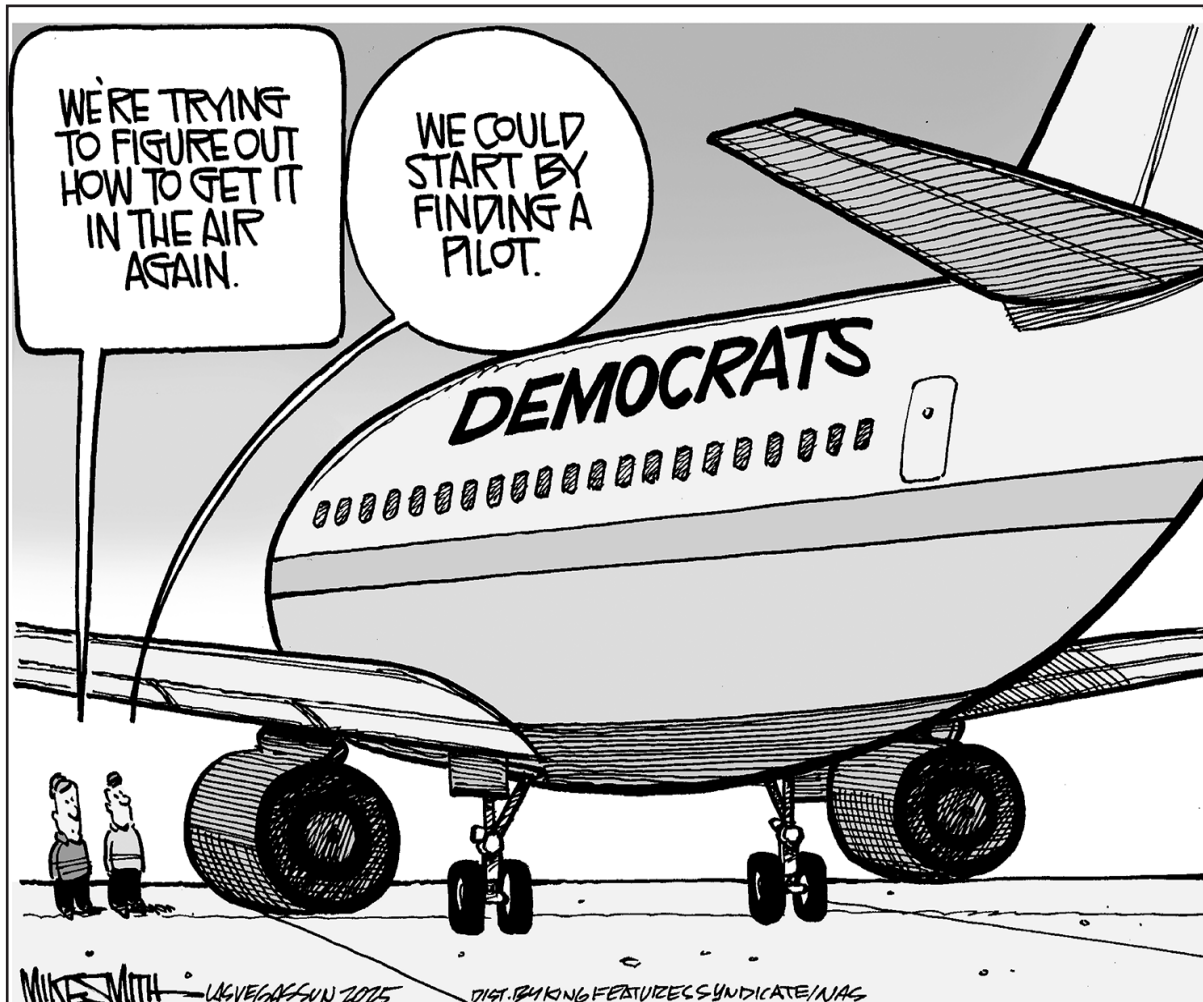

Pack properly and make sure you have enough essentials. Prior to leaving home, check the weather at your destination and pack accordingly. Prepare a travel health kit with essentials like hand sanitizer, over-the-counter medications, sunscreen and bug spray. Remember to pack important items like prescription medications in your carry-on luggage in the event of an emergency, or if your checked bags get lost during travel.

Take care of your health during your vacation. Physical activity may help reduce stress and promote well-being. Plan to incorporate some form of activity during your vacation, such as sightseeing walks, bike rides or daytime hikes. To help avoid dehydration, carry a water bottle and refill it throughout the day. Also, make sure to wear and reapply sunscreen to protect your skin and use bug spray to keep yourself safe from bug bites.

Prepare for possible jet lag. Data shows that 60-70% of long-distance travelers may experience some form of jet lag. Preparing for time changes and getting good sleep prior to travel may help reduce symptoms of jet lag. Make sure to drink lots of water. At your destination, soak in the sunlight as this may help reset your internal clock to help promote better sleep, which may be key to reducing jet lag and supporting your immune system.

Consider travel medical insurance and travel protection. Accidents happen. That's why it's important to be prepared for the unexpected. That may include making sure you have health coverage while you're away, which may help you avoid major costs in the event of an accident or sudden illness. If you plan to travel, check with your health plan to see what coverage you may have at your destination — especially if you're traveling internationally as many health plans may not cover medical expenses while abroad.

These tips may help you stay on top of your health so you can enjoy a worry-free vacation and return home reenergized.

A terminal illness didn't mean he had to just give up on living

A terminally ill friend told me many years ago that the toughest part of dying was finding the courage to keep on living with a positive attitude while emotionally preparing for his own death.

To be honest, at the time I wasn't sure I understood what that statement really meant, and I might have teased my old Army buddy about becoming some kind of deathbed philosopher.

But, in my heart of hearts, I wondered to myself if I could muster that kind of courage in the face of certain death within a specified timeframe.

Then and now, I couldn't imagine anything more depressing than being told your illness or injury were incurable and it was time to put your legal affairs in order and prepare your friends and family for the inevitable parting.

My friend's statement has resurfaced in my mind several times in the ensuing years as I've experienced the loss of family members, friends and even casual acquaintances.

Last week I went to the funeral of a man I had known and admired for several years because of his consistently positive outlook on life, his sunny, outgoing personality and the fact that he had lived in a nursing home for more than 25 years without wallowing in self-pity.

He lost his life to one of those degenerative muscle diseases that eventually destroys vital organs. It progressed slowly and surely, but he kept right on with his religious activities, with being thoughtful of others, and constantly advocating on behalf of his fellow patients.

He was only in his mid-50's, but I suspect he got more personal satisfaction out of life on a daily basis than many of us who have lived much longer and been healthier.

In closing, I tip my hat to whomever said that we all should live our lives in such a manner that even the undertaker would be sad to see us go.

A 15-Year-Old Boy Deserved Better

By Brandon LaVoie
Guest Columnist

I didn't vote for Trump because I loved the man. I voted for him because I have a wife and three sons to protect. And last week, I found out the man who murdered a 15-year-old boy in Morehead had been working in a restaurant where my family ate.

That boy's name was Luis Jocsan Nuñez Lopez. His mother was being attacked. Luis stepped in to protect her, and he was shot and killed. His mother was brutally assaulted. Both of them got pulled into something they never asked for, and their lives were shattered.

The man accused of doing it, Gildardo Amador-Martinez, was in this country illegally. Not once. Not twice. Three times. According to federal reports, he crossed the border illegally, was deported, and came back. Then, he came back again. And still, he ended up here, in our state, serving food in a public business like nothing ever happened.

I've got three kids. My wife and I work long days trying to build something honest. We eat cheap meals when we can. We support local restaurants. We trust that if someone's behind the counter, they were cleared to be there. We trusted that system.

That trust is gone.

This isn't about race. This isn't about politics. This is about a fifteen-year-old boy who should still be alive, and a mother who will never be the same. This is about our families getting exposed to danger because people in charge are more concerned with being called intolerant than being held accountable.

Let me be clear. We don't need lectures on tolerance. We need accountability. We need action. And we need it now.

The people of eastern Kentucky are generous. If you come here hungry and honest, we'll feed you. If you show up looking for work and you're willing to earn your place, we'll stand beside you. But if you sneak past the line, lie your way in, and hurt one of our own, we will not stay quiet.

Our town isn't just mourning a boy. We're mourning the truth that it took this incident for anyone to admit the system's broken. How many others have come through the cracks? How many more families will sit down for dinner, unaware of the danger standing in the back of the kitchen?

I didn't vote for a party. I voted for protection. I voted because this is personal. And now I'm writing because this is unforgivable.

We are done being told we're hateful for wanting to know who's walking into our communities. We are done pretending this is someone else's problem. Luis wasn't just a victim. He was us. He was what we fight for. And we'll carry his name forward, not with hashtags, but with action.

And to every politician who looks the other way, your time is up. You'll either protect our children, or you'll be replaced by the ones who will.

CITY OF OLIVE HILL
 REQUEST FOR QUALIFICATIONS (RFQ)

The City of Olive Hill, Kentucky ("City") is seeking a consulting firm for a "Planning-Related Activity (PRA) Toward Strengthening the Mitigation Strategy for Flash-Flooding in the City of Olive Hill and to Include Nature-Based Solutions and Infrastructure Resiliency". This project is being funded by FEMA, State, and Local Funds.

All engineers interested in being considered for this project must submit a Statement of Qualifications (SOQ) detailing qualifications, technical expertise, management and staff capabilities, and related prior experience related to storm water planning and design.

The objective of the competitive process is to objectively select the firm that will provide the highest quality of service. Selected respondents may be interviewed and the firm(s) judged most qualified will be asked to prepare a final proposal which would include fees for said services.

The City reserves the right to reject any and all responses, to waive any technicalities, and to negotiate with the respondent who most nearly meets the project requirements. The City is not responsible or liable for any costs incurred by the consultants replying to this request. The City is an equal opportunity employer and encourages responses from all qualified firms.

Kentucky Relay Service for the hearing and speech impaired: 1.800.648.6056.

Anticipated funding sources for this project include, but are not limited to: FEMA, State, and Local Funds.

Engineering firms wishing to be considered shall submit a Statement of Qualifications (SOQ) pursuant to the RFQ, available by contacting the Olive Hill City Clerk at 225 Roger Patton Drive, Olive Hill, Kentucky 41164. Engineers shall submit six copies of their SOQ to the City. SOQ is limited to fifteen pages maximum. Proposal package shall be clearly marked on the outside envelope – "Statement of Qualifications – City of Olive Hill FEMA Project" to the attention of Mayor Jerry Callihan at the address above, no later than 2:00 pm local time, Friday, August 1, 2025.
